My neighbor, Mr. Gatsby, gave parties all through the summer. Nearly every night his house and gardens were full of music. Men and women walked among the beautiful flowers. They laughed, talked, and drank *champagne.

In the afternoons, Gatsby's guests (あ) swim in the sea or sat on his beach. His motorboat *roared across the *bay. Every weekend, Gatsby's cars carried his guests to and from the city.

Colored lights *hung from the trees in Gatsby's gardens. Food was brought from New York — rich, beautiful food — and it was put on long tables under the trees. There was every kind of drink.

At seven o'clock, the band started to play. Cars from New York were parked outside Gatsby's house. Soon, everyone was a little drunk and talking to (ハ) strangers.

As it became dark, the lights grew brighter. The music and laughter were louder now. More and more people arrived. A girl began to sing with the band. The party started!

Not all these people were invited to Gatsby's house. All kinds of people drove out to Long Island and stopped outside Gatsby's door. Then they joined the party and started to have a good time. Sometimes they were introduced to Gatsby. Sometimes they never saw him.

One day, I was invited to one of Gatsby's parties. (う) As soon as I arrived, I began to look for Gatsby to thank him for his invitation. But no one knew where he was.

As I went to get a drink, I saw Jordan Baker. I walked towards her. I was glad to see someone I knew.

“I thought you might be here,” Jordan said.

We took our drinks and sat down at a small table under a tree. Jordan began to talk to a girl in a yellow dress.

“Do you come to these parties often?” Jordan asked her.

“I come here when I can,” the girl said. “No one cares what I do, so I always have a good time. Last time I was here, I *tore my dress. Do you know, Gatsby sent me a new one! It cost him 265 dollars!”

“There's something strange about a man like that,” another girl said. “He doesn't want any trouble from anybody.” She *leaned across the table and said, “Somebody told me that Gatsby killed a man!”

“I heard he was a German spy,” a man added.

“Oh, no, he was in the American army in the War. But I’m sure he has killed a man!” someone else said. And the girls laughed excitedly.

*Supper was now being served. Jordan and I left our table and went to look for Gatsby.
